PRONOUN BOOK

SHE, HE, THEY, AND ME!

Cassandra Jules Corrigan

Illustrated by Jem Milton

Jessica Kingsley Publishers
London and Philadelphia

Welcome to The Pronoun Book! I'm Ellie!

And we're here to tell you all about pronouns!

And I'm Casey.

Pronouns are words we use in sentences to refer to the person who is talking, or to someone or something that is being talked about.

The most commonly used pronouns are she/her/hers and he/him/his. Here are some examples:

She's my foster sister.

Her hair is purple.

That flag belongs to him.

Traditionally, she/her/hers has been used to refer to females and he/him/his has been used to refer to males.

When you are born, you are assigned "female" or "male" based on your biological sex, and people will refer to you with the pronouns that match your assigned gender at birth.

HE/HIM/HIS

SHE/HER/HERS

Pronouns are also used to refer to the gender a person identifies as.

Our

GENDER IDENTITY

is the gender we know ourselves to be.

For most people, the sex they were assigned at birth matches their gender identity. This is called being

CISGENDER.

Hey, I'm Jamal, and I'm cisgender. I was assigned male at birth and I identify as male. My pronouns are

HE/HIM/HIS.

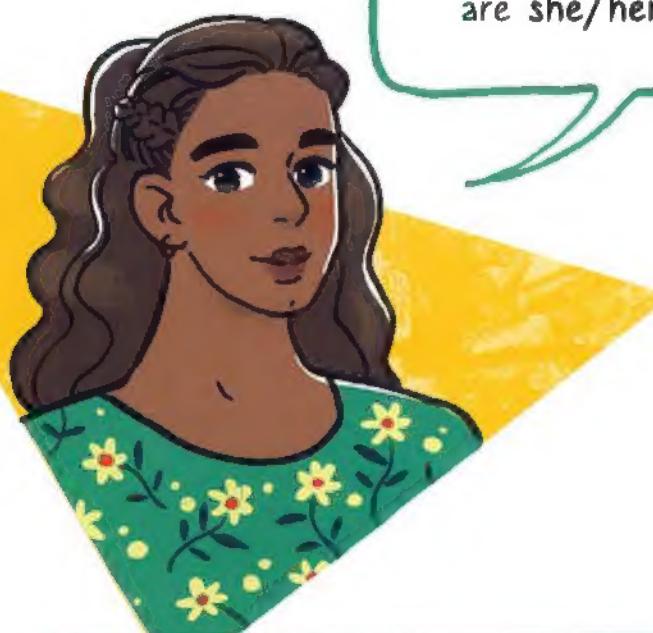

Hi, I'm Amy, and I'm a cisgender woman. I was assigned female at birth and I identify as female. My pronouns are

SHE/HER/HERS.

However, for some people, the sex they were assigned at birth does not match the gender they identify with. This is called being

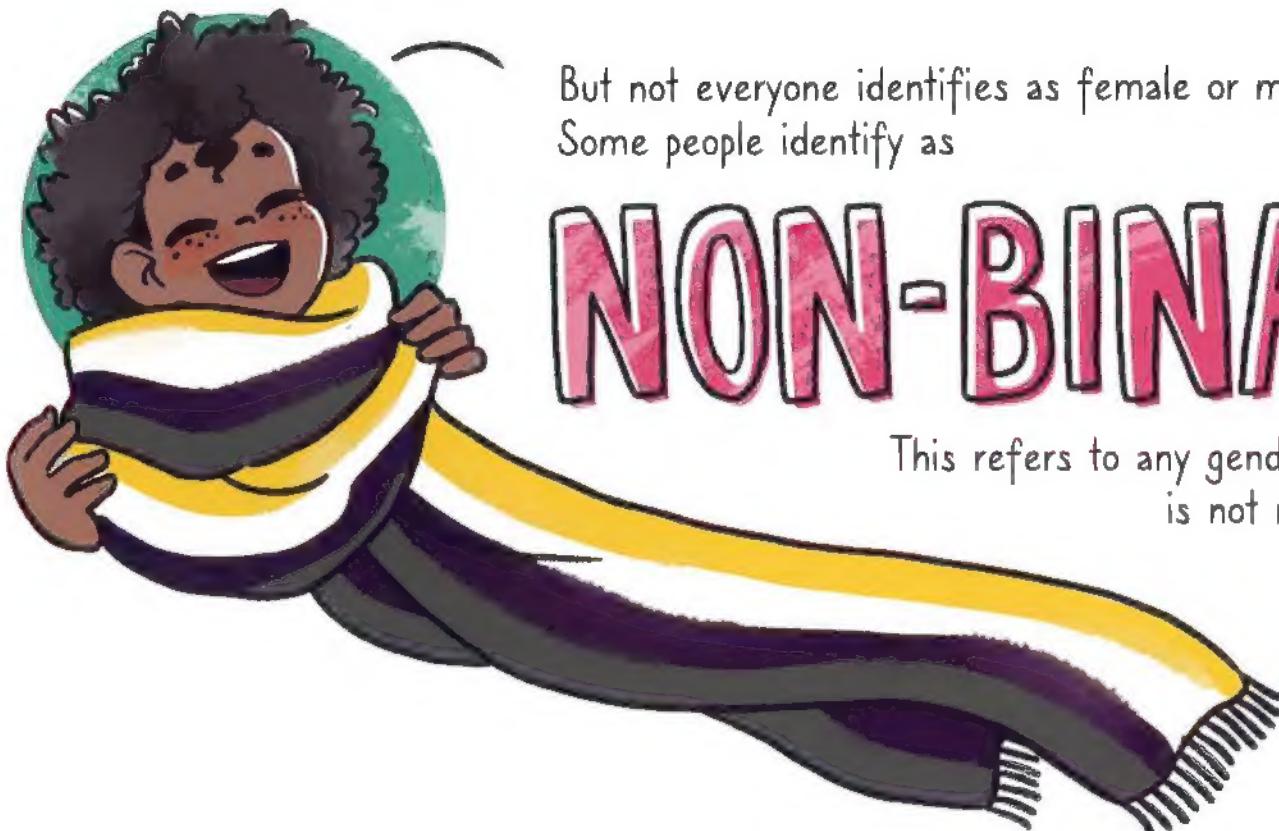

TRANSGENDER.

Hello, I'm Naomi. I was assigned male at birth, but I identify as female. My pronouns are she/her/hers and I am transgender.

Hi! I'm Alex, and I'm transgender. I was assigned female at birth, but I identify as male. My pronouns are he/him/his.

But not everyone identifies as female or male.
Some people identify as

NON-BINARY.

This refers to any gender identity that is not male or female.

This includes agender people who don't identify with any gender; bigender people who identify as two or more genders either simultaneously or fluctuating between them; genderqueer people who identify as somewhere in between multiple genders; and genderfluid people who identify as different genders at different times. Non-binary people look just like anyone else, and you should never assume anyone's gender simply based on how they look.

People who identify as a non-binary gender often use THEY/ THEM/ THEIRS pronouns. Here are some examples:

"They are my Dad."

"The dress belongs to them."

"Birthday cake is their favorite cake!"

She/her/hers, he/him/his, and they/them/theirs can be used by anyone. If you identify as a non-binary gender, you can also use she/her/hers and he/him/his.

Just like everyone has different names, different people use different pronouns to refer to themselves.

My name is Fatima, and my pronouns are she/her.

My name is José, and my pronouns are he/him.

My name is Rose, and my pronouns are they/them.

My name is Peter, and my pronouns are he/him and they/them.

Some people are also born

INTERSEX.

This is when someone is born with a body type that does not fit typical definitions of male and female.

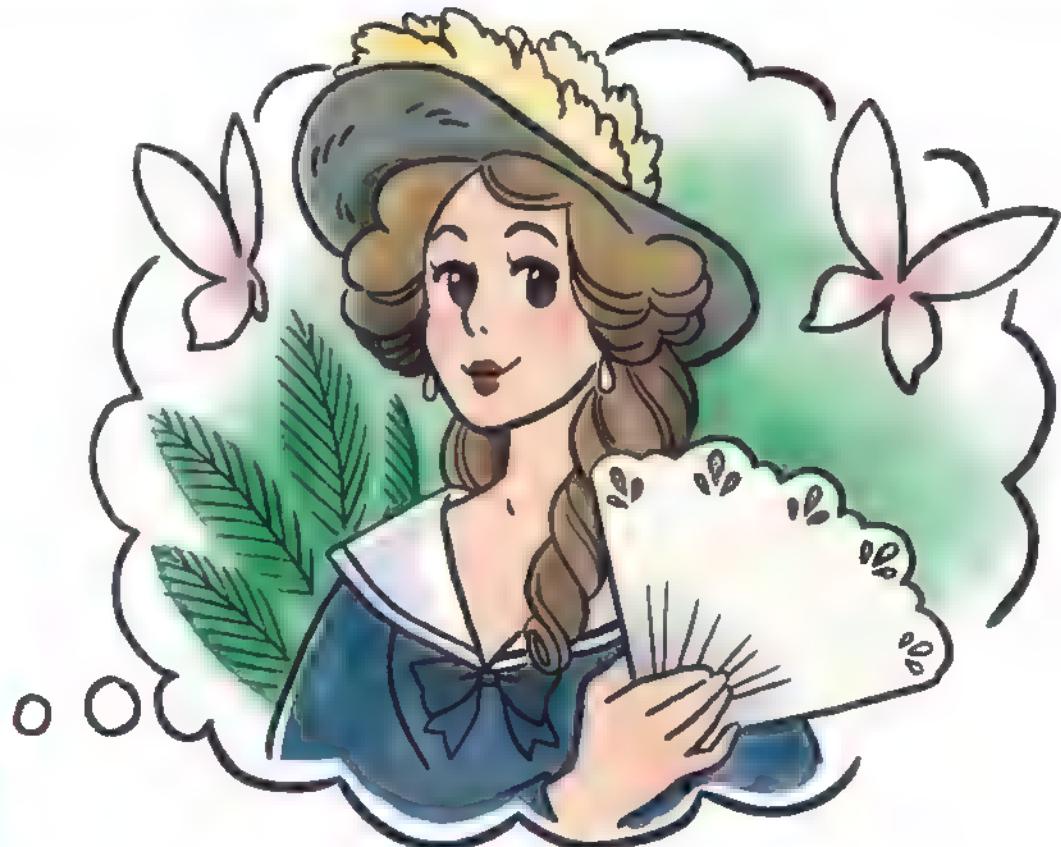

Someone who is intersex might identify as female, male, or as a non-binary gender, and may consider themselves to be cisgender or transgender. An intersex person may wish to use gender pronouns other than she/her/hers and he/him/his, such as they/them/theirs or a such as ze/zir/zirs.

"Neo" means "new," but some experts believe that neo-pronouns have been used since 1858. That was a long time ago!

Some examples of neo-pronouns include ey/em/eir, fae/faer/faers, and xe/xem/xyr. Neo-pronouns are usually used by trans and intersex people, but they can be used by anyone! Because there are so many types of neo-pronouns, they can seem confusing at first, but you use them just like you would any other pronoun. For example, "Xe brushed xyr hair."

You don't always have to use the same pronouns. Some people experiment with different pronouns until they find the ones right for them, trying on pronouns the same way you'd try on clothes at the store to see if they fit.

Some people change their pronouns frequently, whereas other people never change their pronouns. You should always use the pronouns that are right for you.

A colorful illustration of a woman with dark purple hair and a young child with dark curly hair. The woman is wearing a green jacket and a white shirt, and she is hugging the child from behind. The child is wearing a red shirt and a yellow and white striped belt. They are both smiling. A green speech bubble is positioned to the left of the woman, containing the text.

Changing pronouns can be scary.
But no matter what pronouns you use, those who matter most will love and support you all the same.

Using the correct pronouns for someone is an important way of showing respect and kindness, so it's important to get it right! When you use the wrong pronouns to address someone, it is called misgendering and can be upsetting for that person.

If you mess up and call someone by the incorrect pronouns, don't worry! Simply apologize and correct yourself and try to get it right next time.

I really enjoyed Elliot's birthday party. He is so much fun!

No, not "he." Elliot uses she/her pronouns. She is so much fun!

Sorry, I forgot. Thank you for reminding me!

And if you meet someone new or forget someone's pronouns, just ask!

There is a whole world of pronouns to explore.
The great thing about language is that it's always changing and only limited by our imagination.
As a result, pronouns are only limited by our imagination as well.

A colorful illustration of a woman and a young child waving from a beach. The woman, with dark curly hair, wears a green hoodie and blue pants. The child, with dark curly hair, wears a yellow and white striped shirt and red overalls. They are standing on a white sandy beach with yellow and red beach umbrellas in the background. Two speech bubbles are above them. The woman's bubble says, "Thank you for reading The Pronoun Book! We hope you've enjoyed yourself and learned something new along the way. Until next time, goodbye from them!" The child's bubble says, "And goodbye from her!"

Thank you for reading The Pronoun Book!
We hope you've enjoyed yourself and learned something new along the way.
Until next time, goodbye from them!

And goodbye from her!

TIPS AND RESOURCES FOR ADULTS

So, you're trying to teach kids in your life about pronouns. Congratulations! You've just made an important step toward building a more accepting and understanding future for our youth!

Teaching kids about pronouns can be a daunting task, but starting the conversation is the hardest part. I hope this book has made it a little easier. After reading this book, you and your little ones might have more questions. That's okay! Learning is a process for everyone that never ends, so it's natural not to have all the answers no matter what age you are!

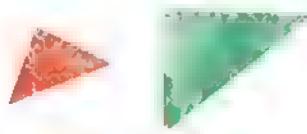

In the end, the best thing you can do for your child is to set a good example. Here are some simple but effective ways you can model good pronoun and gender acceptance for the kids in your life:

- Make a point to ask for people's pronouns when you meet someone new.
- Avoid terms like "preferred pronouns." A person's correct pronouns are not "preferred"; they are mandatory!
- Encourage your child to ask questions, not make assumptions!
- Make sure you and your kids are practicing the correct pronouns for a person, even if you aren't in that person's presence. No one likes it if someone talks about them in a disrespectful manner behind their back.

- Remember: correct pronouns aren't a privilege; they are basic human decency! It isn't okay to misgender someone simply because they do something you don't agree with or to use misgendering as a punishment
- Practice the difference between plural and singular "they." If a person uses they/them pronouns, it wouldn't be proper to say "themselves," because there is only one of them. Rather, you should say "themselves."
- If you accidentally misgender someone, don't make a scene or a big deal about it. This can be very tiring for people who are frequently misgendered. Simply apologize, correct yourself, and do better next time.
- Be your child's best ally. If another adult uses the wrong pronouns with your child, talk to them about it. Make sure your child's teachers, babysitters, and friends' parents know that disrespecting your child by using incorrect pronouns for them will not be tolerated.
- Challenge yourself to think differently by using terms such as "sibling" or "parent" instead of "brother/sister" or "mother/father."
- Keep learning and exploring! There is a world of constantly evolving resources out there to strengthen your skills. GLSEN and PFLAG are two great places to start!*
